According to the appellant arguments stated on pages 6-9, the combined cited references, Zhou, Warner, Smith, Gay and Chen, alone or in combination, fails to clearly teach or fairly suggest the features of incorporating a codec within the same integrated circuit as a signal processor that provides linefeed driver control signals in response to tip and ring signals sensed by the signal processor, as substantially described and connected to the independent claims 1, 5, and 21.

Furthermore, in review of the appellant arguments stated on pages 10-12, the above combined cited references, alone or in combination, fails to clearly teach or fairly suggest the features of a codec residing within a common integrated circuit with a signal processor that senses the tip and ring lines of a subscriber loop, wherein the signal processor computes common mode and differential mode components of the subscriber loop, as substantially described and connected to the independent claim 15.
